Medical skin care for the intimate area

According to Prof. Dr. Eiko E. Petersen

MINDFUL CARE OF SENSITIVE INTIMATE SKIN

OUR MOST SENSITIVE SKIN BARRIER

The skin in the intimate area is particularly sensitive even when healthy, and deserves regular care. Unlike the skin in other parts of the body, it is thinner, more sensitive, and constantly exposed to various influences that can disrupt its balance, and to some extent the same applies regardless of gender. Whether it's tight clothing, highly perfumed care products, frequent shaving or sweating, all of these can cause stress to the intimate skin and make it more susceptible to irritation.

Factors such as stress, hormonal changes (e.g. during the menopause, postpartum/when breastfeeding, and after cancer therapy) or taking certain medications can damage the natural protective barrier of the skin in the intimate area. A healthy balance is critical to avoid unpleasant irritation, dryness or itching.

HOW TO ENSURE THE SENSITIVE INTIMATE SKIN REMAINS BALANCED:

- Use mild, pH-friendly skin care and cleaning products specifically developed for the intimate area
- Be careful that you don't clean your skin excessively – less is generally more
- Wear breathable clothing made of natural fibers to avoid skin irritation
- Avoid highly perfumed products that could irritate the sensitive intimate skin
- Find out about the side effects of medications before taking them and seek advice from your doctor or pharmacist if you have any questions
